Bratton issues apology for arrest of tennis pro Blake

Bratton apologizes. / GETTY IMAGES

Sorry. The top cop offered apologies to James Blake on behalf of both NYPD and Mayor Bill de Blasio.

After a very public game of phone tag, New York City's top cop finally got ahold of pro tennis star James Blake to apologize for his mistaken arrest.

"I spoke to Mr. Blake a short time ago and personally apologized for [Wednesday's] incident," NYPD Commissioner Bill Bratton said in a statement late Thursday.

Earlier in the day, Bratton told reporters that he has tried to reach out to Blake to personally apologize, and to extend said apologies on behalf of Mayor Bill de Blasio, but had not been able to reach the athlete.

Bratton added that Blake volunteered to speak to Internal Affairs detectives looking into the arresting officers' actions.

"Mr. Blake said he would like to meet with the mayor and me at a future date, which we would be agreeable to," Bratton wrote.

At an earlier press conference at police headquarters, Bratton pushed back on the idea that Blake, who is biracial, was targeted by the five arresting officers, who are white, on account of racial bias.

Chief of Detectives Robert Boyce told reporters that the actual suspect who officers mistook Blake for, shared many physical traits with the tennis player.

NYPD declined to release a photo of the alleged suspect, who was eventually arrested for credit card fraud in the vicinity of the midtown Manhattan hotel Blake was staying at.

"They look like twins," Boyce said.

A witness at the hotel mistook Blake for the suspect, which led to the five officers charging toward and arresting Blake.

Bratton told reporters that a review of surveillance video from the hotel showed Blake did not appear to resist arrest, and described the way with which it went down as "inappropriate."

The officer, who has not been identified, was placed on desk duty shortly after the incident.

"The use of force is such that I'm comfortable that it's in the best interest of the department to place the officer on modified assignment," Bratton said.

Blake told ABC on Thursday morning before Bratton's comments that he was still shaken up by the arrest.

"We all need to be held accountable for our actions," Blake said. "Police as well."

Tickets. 80K New Yorkers to see pope in Central Park

City officials said a total of 80,000 people who either called in or registered online between Sept. 3 and 7 will get to watch the pope as he travels along Central Park West Drive on later this month.

More than 93,000 New Yorkers had sought out tickets to witness Pope Francis's Central Park procession on Sept. 25.

The ticketed excursion through New York's most famous park is scheduled to take place before his Friday Mass at Madison Square Garden to an expected 20,000 congregants.

POPE FRANCIS / GETTY IMAGES

"The overwhelming response we received from New Yorkers throughout the state made clear: Pope Francis is one of the world's most important voices," Mayor Bill de Blasio said in a statement, "and his historic visit to New York City will be an unforgettable experience."

The administration reported 84,023 people from across the state entered the ticket lottery via the city's website, while 9,120 entered the lottery via 311.

It's unclear how the city will prevent resale of the tickets, which will be distributed after the winners have been notified between Sept. 10 and 14.

On Monday, Philadelphia Mayor Michael Nutter decried the profiteering off of tickets to Pope Francis' events in the city after his stop in New York after one individual offered a set of four seats for $1,000 on eBay. CHESTER SORIA

Guilty plea in penis enlargement procedure death

A New Jersey woman pleaded guilty to manslaughter charges after one of her patients died from a penis enlargement procedure gone awry in 2011.

Rivera / ESSEX COUNTY CORRECTIONAL FACILITY

Kasia Rivera reportedly injected 22-year-old Justin Street's penis with silicone at her home in East Orange. The silicone however went directly into Street's bloodstream and lead to his death the next day due to organ failure.

"You injected the silicone into his penis?" Essex County Assistant Prosecutor William Neafsey asked Rivera during a hearing.

Rivera, who is not a medical professional, said she did.

In exchange for her plea, Rivera will receive five years in prison and may face deportation back to Jamaica, NJ.com reported.

Manhattan D.A. to aid clearing rape kit backlogs

Untested. The D.A.'s Office is awarding $38 million to clear years of untested rape kits in 20 states.

Twenty states across the nation may be able to eliminate the backlog of untested rape kits thanks to a $38 million grant awarded through the Manhattan District Attorney's Office.

Manhattan's District Attorney Cyrus Vance, Jr. announced today that 32 jurisdictions will receive awards ranging from $97,000 to $2 million to test over 56,000 rape kits.

"These grants will generate leads in thousands of cases across the country, some of them decades old," Vance said. "Tackling the national rape kit backlog means addressing a women's and human rights issue that has been ignored for far too long. We are refusing to accept that some criminal justice problems are just too big – too ingrained, too controversial, too expensive – to solve."

New York is not one of the recipients as the state cleared a backlog of 17,000 rape kits from 2000 to 2003, resulting in 49 indictments connected to unsolved cases in Manhattan alone, according to the D.A.'s reports.

"By helping to solve sexual assault cases in other cities, we are ultimately addressing and preventing sexual assault in New York City – a critical component of ensuring that we remain the safest big city in America," said Mayor Bill de Blasio.

In addition, Vice President Joe Biden together with U.S. Attorney General Loretta Lynch announced the U.S. Department of Justice Bureau of Justice Assistance's (BJA) $41 million initiative toward ending the backlog.

Some recipients from the Manhattan D.A.'s office will receive training and technical assistance from BJA. Although both agencies coordinated so there wouldn't be any duplication of services, nine jurisdictions will receive funding for both.

"For anyone who has felt isolated and afraid, left out and left behind as a result of a sexual crime, our message is clear," said Attorney General Lynch. "We will not forget you. We will not abandon you. You are not alone."

Blind woman rescued by riders from subway tracks

Commuters saved a blind woman after she fell onto the subway tracks at the Wall Street 2/3 stop Thursday morning.

According to the MTA, the woman was walking down the stairs when she thought a train was in the station and stepped off the platform falling into the southbound side of the tracks.

Two male riders helped her up and, after alerting paramedics, she was taken to Bellevue Hospital.

The incident did not disrupt subway service on the line. KARINA E. CUEVAS

NYPD. Woman snaps pic of D train pervert

Cops are looking for a subway creep who allegedly touched himself inappropriately while staring at a woman in August.

Authorities said the unidentified man began to fondle himself in front of the unsuspecting 25-year-old woman on Aug. 5 at around midnight while on a southbound D train.

The woman told police she noticed the suspect standing across from her with his hands down his pants, staring at her as he manipulated himself.

Investigators said the man said something to the victim before he bolted as it stopped at a downtown Brooklyn subway platform.

NYPD released a photo of the suspect, whom they describe as a bald black man last seen wearing a black baseball cap, blue sneakers, a blue shirt and glasses.

White House: US to accept 10,000 Syrian refugees

Help. It is the first specific commitment the U.S. has made toward increasing its acceptance of refugees.

President Barack Obama has directed his administration to prepare to take in at least 10,000 Syrian refugees over the next year, the White House said on Thursday.

Since the start of the Syrian civil war in 2011, the United States has taken in 1,500 refugees, with 300 more expected to be cleared by October.

But refugee advocates and some members of Congress say taking in an additional 10,000 refugees does not go far enough toward addressing the humanitarian crisis triggered by the war, which has prompted a massive refugee influx into Europe.

In a letter distributed to House Democrats and seen by Reuters, Democratic Representative David Cicilline asked Obama to accommodate 65,000 Syrian refugees by the end of 2016. Religious groups have called for the United States to accept 100,000 Syrian refugees.

European countries have taken in waves of migrants fleeing violence. Germany allowed 20,000 in over the weekend and is preparing for 800,000 this year.

Melanie Nezer, vice president of HIAS, a global refugee advocacy group, said allowing 10,000 more refugees from Syria is not an adequate response to the crisis at hand.

The United States is conducting airstrikes in Syria as part of its effort to fight against Islamic State. The United States currently admits annually a total of 70,000 refugees from around the world, and is due to increase that total by 5,000 for the fiscal year starting in October.

White House spokesman Josh Earnest would not say whether the 10,000 Syrians would be a part of or in addition to that total.

Earnest said national security was a top concern for admitting Syrians, a country rife with anti-American militants, noting that intensive security screening for refugees could take up to 18 months.

"I do feel confident in telling you that the president will not sign off on a process that cuts corners when it comes to the basic safety and security of the American people and the U.S. homeland," Earnest told reporters.

The additional background checks and processing will require a "significant financial commitment" from Congress, Earnest said. REUTERS

Refugees

Republicans speak out about the idea of taking in additional refugees.

- Senior Republican Sens. Bob Corker and Lindsey Graham have said they are open to the idea of allowing more refugees, as long as they are subjected to security screenings.

TOM FOREMAN

TOM FOREMAN IS A CNN CORRESPONDENT AND AUTHOR OF THE UPCOMING BOOK "MY YEAR OF RUNNING DANGEROUSLY."

THE CRACKPOT JACKPOT

My younger daughter grew up fixated on Alice in Wonderland. Maybe because her name is Ali. But we watched the movie, read the book and played at make-believe tumbles down the rabbit hole so many times I began desperately trying to interest her in other tales.

"Hey look, Peter Pan!" I'd say with a broad grin. No response. "A Little Princess!" I'd say, beaming. Nope. "I don't suppose you'd be interested in 'A Farewell to Arms'?"

"Daaaad," she'd say, "I just want to hear about a crazy place where there are no rules and nothing makes sense!"

"Have you ever dealt with an airline's customer service department?"

It comes to mind because I think many voters are staring into the looking glass of 2016 and seeing growing insanity on the other side. Democratic outrage is aimed at Donald Trump, who prattles like the Mad Hatter about great walls, China and how women just love him. Repubs (when they are not savaging Hillary Clinton) rage about Bernie Sanders, who rushes around like the March Hare, spouting liberal talking points as if he is leading a conga line down Main Street to the steady thump of "Get Up, Stand Up."

Quoted

"Democratic outrage is aimed at Donald Trump, who prattles like the Mad Hatter about great walls, China and how women just love him."

The most dedicated members of the opposition would sum up each candidate in a phrase: "What a crackpot!" Yet Trump is reigning in the GOP polls, and Sanders is rising fast against Clinton, who started with so many advantages that political analysts once gave Sanders no chance.

So how is this happening? Trump and Sanders are saying what they think — loud and proud. They are taking daring (some would say foolish) positions even as pundits howl. And, importantly, the more-mainstream challengers just continue working their focus groups, grinning like Cheshire cats and saying almost nothing — refusing to take real stances, right now, on issues that matter.

Once that was the way to victory, but I'm not so sure anymore. I think we have passed through a mirror and on this side authenticity matters, no matter how wild. And that has left many of the old-fashioned pols staring at the numbers muttering, "Curiouser and curiouser."

Senate. Democrats block effort to kill Iran nuclear deal

A Republican-backed effort to kill the Iran nuclear agreement was blocked in the U.S. Senate on Thursday, handing a major foreign policy victory to President Barack Obama.

Forty-two Democrats and independents voted against a measure to advance the bill, meaning opponents of the nuclear agreement failed to get the 60 votes needed in the 100-member chamber to proceed with a resolution of disapproval of the pact.

Democrats said that the vote killed efforts in the Republican-controlled Congress to derail the nuclear pact between six world powers and Tehran. Had opponents of the agreement passed such a resolution, Obama would have been barred from waiving many U.S. sanctions on Iran, a crucial part of the nuclear pact.

Quoted

"We'll revisit the issue next week and see if maybe any folks want to change their minds." McConnell

But the Senate's Republican majority leader, Mitch McConnell, immediately took steps to clear the way for another Senate vote on the matter.

Under a law Obama signed in May, Congress has a 60-day period ending on Sept. 17 to pass a resolution disapproving the international agreement.

Six things you need to know

1 US urged to tighten cybersecurity to counter Chinese hacking

The United States must beef up cybersecurity against Chinese hackers targeting a broad range of U.S. interests to raise the cost to China of engaging in such activities, America's top intelligence official said on Thursday.

The testimony by Director of National Intelligence James Clapper before a congressional committee added to pressure on Beijing over its conduct in cyberspace just weeks before Chinese President Xi Jinping makes a state visit to Washington.

Presenting a dire assessment of global cyberthreats, Clapper said China and Russia posed the most advanced cyberthreats but that Iran and North Korea could also cause serious disruptions despite having less-sophisticated technology.

The Obama administration is considering targeted sanctions against Chinese individuals and companies for cyberattacks against U.S. commercial targets, several U.S. officials have said.

Chinese hackers have also been implicated in the massive hacking of the U.S. government's personnel office disclosed this year. Two breaches of security clearance applications exposed the personal data of more than 20 million federal employees. REUTERS

2 Google pushes into mobile payment

Google said it would roll out Android Pay, a one-touch payment app on Android devices, in more than 1 million locations in the United States.

The payment service can be used through Android devices with near-field communication technology and Google's KitKat 4.4+ operating system.

Android Pay will compete with Apple's Apple Pay in the mobile payments market, which research firm IDC estimates will be $1 trillion in 2017.

Existing users of the Google Wallet app can access Android Pay through an update, while new users can download it from the Google Play store in the next few days. REUTERS

3 Man with hand grenade shot dead by police in Kansas City

A police officer shot and killed a man who was carrying a hand grenade when he emerged from his home in Kansas City, Missouri, after a 12-hour standoff with authorities, police said.

The grenade was later determined not to be live, according to police.

The man had barricaded himself in his home on Wednesday morning and made threats against Jackson County deputies who were there to serve an eviction notice, according to the Kansas City Police Department, which did not release the man's name. REUTERS

4 Honda gets California approval for self-driving cars on roads

Honda has received a permit from the state of California to drive its autonomous vehicles on public streets, joining companies ranging from Google to Volkswagen in testing the fast-growing technology.

The California Department of Motor Vehicles on its website listed Honda as the most recent of 10 companies that had received the self-driving permits as of Friday.

Other companies already approved include Daimler's Mercedes Benz, Tesla Motors, Nissan and BMW. REUTERS

5 Fiat Chrysler to recall 1.06M trucks over steering glitch

FCA US, a unit of Fiat Chrysler Automobiles, is recalling about 1.06 million of its Ram trucks in the United States to fix a steering wheel defect that may cause an air bag to deploy inadvertently.

The company said an internal investigation discovered that these trucks may have steering-wheel wiring harnesses that wear out because of contact with a spring.

Such wear may cause a short-circuit that may result in the inadvertent deployment of the driver-side air bag. REUTERS

6 Merkel says Facebook needs to do more against racist posts

German Chancellor Angela Merkel urged Facebook to do more against racist comments and hate posts, in comments due to be published in a regional newspaper on Friday.

Germany is expecting a record-breaking influx of refugees this year. Politicians and celebrities have voiced concern about a rise of xenophobic comments in German on Facebook and other social media platforms because of the refugee crisis.

"When people stir up sedition on social networks using their real name, it's not only the state that has to act, but also Facebook as a company should do something against these [posters]," Merkel told regional newspaper Rheinische Post.

She said Facebook already had the necessary code of conduct, but there was a lack of control and enforcement. "The rules need to be implemented," Merkel said.

The Rheinische Post newspaper is published in Germany's most populous state, North Rhine-Westphalia, which is obliged to take around a fifth of all refugees coming to the country. REUTERS

Upward. Lockheed-Boeing rocket venture expands partnership with Bezos' space firm

Jeff Bezos, the founder of Blue Origin and Amazon.com / GETTY IMAGES

United Launch Alliance, the biggest supplier of rockets for the U.S. military, will ramp up rocket engine work with Amazon.com founder Jeff Bezos' space company, the companies said on Thursday.

The move comes as ULA, a partnership of Lockheed Martin and Boeing, is considering a $2 billion cash buyout offer from Aerojet Rocketdyne Holdings, sources familiar with the matter told Reuters.

Aerojet also is developing an alternative engine for ULA's next-generation rocket, called Vulcan.

ULA and Bezos' space company, Blue Origin, said last year that the companies would jointly develop a liquid natural gas-fueled rocket engine to replace the Russian-made RD-180 engines that currently power ULA's workhorse Atlas 5 booster.

ULA can no longer import the Russian engines for U.S. military launches, the bulk of its business, under a congressional ban enacted in response to Russia's involvement in Ukraine.

Aerojet is working on another engine, called the AR1, though its development is at least 16 months behind Blue Origin's BE-4, ULA Chief Executive Tory Bruno said at a congressional hearing in June.

ULA has a contract with Aerojet to use the AR1 as a backup if Blue Origin's development program stumbles.

ULA, Lockheed, Boeing and Aerojet have declined to comment about the reported buyout offer.

However, on Thursday ULA and Blue Origin said they had agreed to expand the production capabilities of the BE-4, which is targeted to make its debut flight in 2019.

Bezos is scheduled to be in Florida on Tuesday to unveil plans for its own rocket manufacturing plant and launch pad at Cape Canaveral Air Force Station, located just south of NASA's Kennedy Space Center. Blue Origin intends to use the BE-4 engine in its rockets as well as sell them to ULA and potentially other customers.

LOVE IS THE ANSWER
LAND OF LIBERTY

Feast on this

Feeling the pressure of an overabundance of great, buzzworthy TV? Narrowing down what you should be adding to your DVR queue each fall is tough. So why not cater your TV watching to your tastes? Sometimes, you want something big and meaty to chew on all night, and sometimes you're more in the mood for something light and fluffy. To help you decide on your evening meals, here's our menu for all the new shows you can watch this fall.

LISA WEIDENFELD

Comfort food

When you want to spend time watching people (or puppets) who look familiar, these are the shows to veg out with.

ABC

'The Muppets'

There aren't many creative properties as beloved as the Muppets, who return for a new show this fall. The premise: It's an "Office"-style mockumentary about the filming of a late-night talk show Miss Piggy is hosting. Backstage high jinks abound, and the Internet was afire a few weeks ago with the news that Kermit and Piggy had split and Kermit was seeing a new pig. Is all of this a bit too 2015 for a group of puppets from the '70s? You'll have to decide for yourself.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 22, 8 P.M., ABC

CBS

'Life in Pieces'

Sitcoms about families are nothing new, but this show debuts a new way of making sure everyone in the family gets equal attention. Each episode is split into four vignettes, with each one following a different member of the family, from the adult children, played by Thomas Sadoski, Colin Hanks and Betsy Brandt, to the parents, played by Dianne Wiest and James Brolin. There's no need to reinvent the wheel when you have a group of pros like these in charge.

MONDAY, SEPT. 21, 8:30 P.M., CBS

FOX

'The Grinder'

Rob Lowe's career has taken a lot of turns over the years, but recently he's been having fun making fun of his own sheer attractiveness, as he did on "Parks and Recreation" and now on "The Grinder." He plays an actor best known for portraying an over-the-top TV lawyer, who has since decided to move back to his hometown to help out his actual lawyer brother, who's played by Fred Savage. Not surprisingly, Savage is not thrilled by the presence of his older, famous sibling.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 29, 8:30 P.M., FOX

FOX

'Rosewood'

"Brilliant, eccentric man outsmarts everyone around him" gets another turn with this new procedural, with Morris Chestnut starring as the titular Rosewood, who runs a private, high-tech autopsy business, and is brought in to consult with the local police department. He's more "Castle" than "House," but with a twist: He's got a series of serious, life-threatening health issues, none of which affect his day-to-day functioning, but which you can expect to arise at dramatic moments.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 23, 8 P.M., FOX

Cocktails after work

Sometimes you're just looking for a good time. Try these for tart — but occasionally hard-hitting — takes on a range of unusual topics.

CBS

'Supergirl'

The latest superhero show is finally, for once, starring a woman. Supergirl is a little Ally McBealesque — Melissa Benoist's Kara Danvers (Clark Kent's cousin) is smart and competent, but lacking a little bit in confidence. Fitting, then, that Calista Flockhart returns to network television as her "Devil Wears Prada"-channeling boss. Though the show has its rom-com side, it also devotes a whole scene to discussing whether "girl" is really an appropriate name for its heroine.

MONDAY, OCT. 26, 8:30 P.M., CBS

EDDY CHEN, THE CW

'Crazy Ex Girlfriend'

This dark dramedy is exploring what leads someone to fit the stereotype of the "crazy ex girlfriend." Oh, and the crazy ex frequently imagines that parts of her life are a musical. Have you already stopped reading? Hopefully not, because the show, at least in the pilot sent to critics, is pulling off that mix of genres perfectly, with music comedy star Rachel Bloom stepping into her first starring TV role with confidence. It might be the most unusual show on this fall.

MONDAY, OCT. 12, 8 P.M., CW

HULU

'Casual'

Hulu seems to like dark comedies for its original programming, between this and the catty "Difficult People." The show stars Michaela Watkins ("Saturday Night Live"). Here, she's a therapist trying to adjust to the changes in her life after her husband leaves her and she and her teenage daughter have to move in with her possibly suicidal brother, who created a popular dating site. It's a lot of premise, but the show is mostly about hanging out with their struggling, but always funny, family.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 7, HULU

FOX

'Grandfathered'

John Stamos returns to TV in this show about a playboy restaurant owner who discovers, in one of the all-time weirdest days, that he's both a father and a grandfather, as his previously unknown son has a baby. Can he adjust to being a family man? Stamos is very much playing to type, but when that's as charming as it is here, we're not going to complain. Extra credit here for the welcome presence of Paget Brewster, who plays the mother of his son, and perhaps the lost love of his life (of course).

TUESDAY, SEPT. 29, 8 P.M., FOX

For the carnivores

If you're looking to really indulge in your TV time, and you like your steak rare and bloody, these are the shows for you.

FX

'Bastard Executioner'

Fans of "Sons of Anarchy" should check this one out, since it comes from "SOA" creator Kurt Sutter. This one seems likely to be just as dark and gory as the first, but with a big change: It's set in the medieval era, which we assume means significantly fewer motorcycles appear. Katey Sagal and Stephen Moyer of "True Blood" star, with newcomer Lee Jones taking on the lead role.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 15, 10 P.M., FX

FX

'Fargo'

While people might have been a little hesitant about the idea of a "Fargo" TV show, the success of the first season put those concerns to rest. The new season is set in the '70s, and features Patrick Wilson as a stoic lawman, accompanied by Ted Danson. There are other familiar faces, from Kirsten Dunst to Brad Garrett, but we won't spoil who the bad guys are.

MONDAY, OCT. 12, 10 P.M., FX

FOX

'Scream Queens'

Not to be confused with "American Horror Story," this new series from Ryan Murphy stars the official Scream Queen herself, Jamie Lee Curtis, and pays homage to the clever meta commentary of the "Scream" movies. Emma Roberts plays a sociopathic sorority queen bee, who would lead her group of girls to greatness if only they weren't getting brutally murdered one by one.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 22, 8 P.M., FOX

Sushi and fusion

Sometimes, you want something tasty but light that'll keep you moving into the night. This is what you should watch if you're on the run.

NBC

'The Blindspot'

We have to give Jaimie Alexander the "devoted to her craft" award: It takes hours to apply the full-body tattoos she wears in this thriller. She plays an amnesiac who's discovered naked in a bag in the middle of Times Square. It's really too bad she can't remember anything — those tattoos are clues about potential crimes, and she and her FBI keepers have to decode them.

MONDAY, SEPT. 21, 10 P.M., NBC

CBS

'Limitless'

Remember that 2011 Bradley Cooper movie about a man who takes a magical drug that helps him use more of his brain power? This is the same thing, but with a new guy trying the drug. BCoop will be stopping by for occasional guest spots as his character from the movie, but the real star is Jake McDorman, who teams up with an FBI agent played by Jennifer Carpenter of "Dexter."

TUESDAY, SEPT. 22, 10 P.M., CBS

ABC

'Quantico'

Get ready for timeline confusion: Each episode of "Quantico" swings between the aftermath of a terrorist attack, and the training of a group of FBI recruits, one of whom may have committed the attack. The series features Bollywood star Priyanka Chopra as the recruit accused of the crime, who must scramble to figure out who the actual perpetrator was.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 27, 10 P.M., ABC

'Time Out of Mind'

Director: Oren Moverman
Stars: Richard Gere, Ben Vereen
Rating: R

● ● ● ● ●

"Time Out of Mind" is a movie about the homeless, but that imparts too much import upon it, and almost certainly implies sentimentality. Movie hobos tend to be holy fools, but Richard Gere's George is closer to Mickey Rourke's Randy "The Ram" in "The Wrestler": an old-timer has-been with a lifetime of dire mistakes to which the film only ever half-alludes. He even has an estranged, though even angrier, daughter (Jena Malone), who seems to have entirely erased him from her life by the time he makes hesitant but creepy overtures to re-enter it. That plot thread never dominates what remains an episodic character study that moves, if at all, in circles. Usually all George is trying to do is procure an always skeezy excuse for a bed, along the way picking up brief encounters with lowly nurses and security guards and the like, who leave his life as quickly as they entered it.

Richard Gere hides in the background as a homeless man in "Time Out of Mind." IFC FILMS

For the most part, George is one of the untold invisibles in the city, and filmmaker Oren Moverman ("The Messenger," "Rampart") almost treats him that way. Sometimes you have to find him inside busy frames, which are usually shot from a remove or behind glass storefronts or fences. Gere, perhaps unexpectedly, fits right in. It's not a movie star ostentatiously dirtying himself up, nor is it a movie star calling attention to how he's not entirely dirtying himself up. His performance is largely reactive, silent. Only when he runs afoul of a fellow hobo, played with hungry verve by Ben Vereen — a stage god rarely given a chance to work his magic in movies — does the movie fill with endless and boundless chatter. Mostly it stays minimalist, rough and uncompromising, so much so that it earns its nice ending. MP

'Sleeping with Other People'

Director: Leslye Headland
Stars: Alison Brie, Jason Sudeikis

● ● ● ● ●

We may be too hard on rom-coms, and with reasonable cause. They can, even the better ones, feel homogenous and programmatic — comfort food that at their worst causes cultural indigestion. "Sleeping with Other People," like "Trainwreck," storms out of the gate feeling like a radical take on the genre. Alison Brie and Jason Sudeikis play sex addicts who once hooked up in college and reunite when both are older. They decide that, obvious sparkage aside, they should stay in the friend zone. Why? Because there wouldn't be a movie otherwise.

Alison Brie and Jason Sudeikis try not to hook up in "Sleeping with Other People." IFC FILMS

Except there would be a movie otherwise, because both Lainey and Jake are incredibly messed up. And they're both jerks — enjoyably articulate a—holes. Writer-director Leslye Headland ("Bachelorette") knows her rom-com cliches and tries to subvert and embrace them in equal measure. This is all heading for a more classical ending. That's not a bad thing, especially given the sharp banter and willingness to go to weird, dark and quietly subversive places. MP

'The Visit' is M. Night Shyamalan being funny on purpose

Ignore this image of actress Olivia DeJonge freaking out. Most of "The Visit" is fun, not freaky. UNIVERSAL PICTURES

'The Visit'

Director: M. Night Shyamalan
Stars: Olivia DeJonge, Ed Oxenbould
Rating: PG-13

● ● ● ● ●

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Despite the vitriol often heaped his way, there are many things M. Night Shyamalan does well — indeed, better than most. He's strong with slow, creeping mood, and not only when building suspense sequences. He knows the value of offscreen space. His sincerity often curdles into unintentional camp, but when he deals with overcoming trauma, he often achieves real transcendence.

Almost none of these talents are what make "The Visit" as rollicking as it is. In fact, the things that it does well are things that have generally, for him, gone disastrously, namely comedy and quick footing. But "The Visit," in which he crashes the party of cheapie found-footage horror (though it's technically a mock-doc), is funny, or at least fun.

The film-within-the-film is made by two kids — aspiring filmmaker teen Rebecca (Olivia DeJonge), who drops terms like "mise en scene" like it's hot, and her younger brother Tyler (Ed Oxenbould) — as they shlep off to the grandparents for a weeklong hoedown.

Their elders seem like typical, mildly demented olds. Then they start acting weirder. Soon it appears something, something maybe supernatural and Shyamalanian, is afoot.

There's a twist — the director's first real one since 2004's "The Village" — but it arrives around the last half hour, and it's a gentler, goofier, almost subversive one than the ones that made the director's name.

Thing is, Shyamalan doesn't quite know what to do with it. It's downright weird watching one of his films not particularly structured around Hitchcock knock-off set pieces. Some of the attempted scares are sloppy and, come the so-so ending, settle for over-the-top shocks rather than beautifully constructed menace.

"The Visit" still works, especially as a horror that recognizes the build is more important than the delivery. If Shyamalan finds a way to marry what works here to the other things he does well elsewhere, look out.

Death Cab for Cutie: rebuilt, not broken

Band member Nick Harmer tells us why change has been good for the band.

EMILY LAURENCE

"It's hard to call it a dream come true because it feels like such a far-fetched dream to have," band member Nick Harmer says of playing MSG. PROVIDED

If you go

Death Cab for Cutie

Sept. 12, 8 p.m.
Madison Square Garden
4 Pennsylvania Plaza,

www.thegarden.com/events/2015/september/death-cab-for-cutie.html

The title of Death Cab for Cutie's eighth album, "Kintsugi," is telling. Not only is "Kintsugi" the Japanese artform of crafting new pottery out of broken clay pieces, it's also representative of the band in its new form: For the first time in 18 years they are without producer and guitarist Chris Walla. Bassist Nick Harmer opens up about this transitional period for the band:

Peaceful parting

For outsiders, Walla's departure may seem abrupt, but Harmer tells us it wasn't as dramatic as fans may assume. "I think as time went on, the longevity of the band surprised us all and it just became a time for him to really concentrate on the other side of his musical life that was important for him, which was producing records," he says.

It also gave the band the chance to work with someone new, producer Rich Costey, who has also produced records with TV On The Radio, Santigold, Foo Fighters and Jane's Addiction, among others. "I feel like this is one of the best albums we've made in a long time and I really credit Rich for being the captain and steering us to that destination," Harmer says of the relationship.

Hidden messages

Honest songwriting is a cornerstone of "Kintsugi," as it's always been with Death Cab. With lyrics like, "Was I in your way when the cameras turned to face you? No room in frame for two," the album seems to be about singer Ben Gibbard's 2012 divorce from actress Zooey Deschanel. So, is it? "Even as a bandmate, I don't know where the line is between fact and fiction," Harmer says.

"All of Ben's songs are inspired by things that have happened to him and the people around him, but none of the songs are ever literally what happened. He's very good at taking feelings and weaving them into something bigger." For all their songs, Harmer stresses that it's more important about what it means to the listener than what it means to them.

Getting more than they've dreamed of

Instead of seeing the band's transitional period as draining, Harmer says they're invigorated by it and that the band's two new touring members — Dave Depper and Zack Rae — have brought new energy to the group. The band is gearing up to play Madison Square Garden for the first time and Harmer says they're still pinching themselves.

"It's hard to call it a dream come true because it just feels like such a far-fetched dream to have," he says. "Sometimes a bit of change, not a lot, but a little bit of change is a good thing."

What was the most fun thing you did this summer?

Designers dish about their warm-weather vacays before the madness of New York Fashion Week.

Tina Chadha

Wes Gordon

"For my birthday in July, I spent the weekend in Harbour Island at Coral Sands Hotel. It's a charming place with the most gorgeous pink sand beaches and crystal clear water. We boated, swam, ate fresh seafood, caught up on reading and totally relaxed. It was perfect."

Karen Walker

"We always escape midyear to Fiji and my favorite spot there is Dolphin Island. Just me and my husband, no other guests, blue sky, thousands of palm trees, incredible home cooking by the gorgeous Dawn, who runs the show. What's not to love?"

Christian Siriano

"The most fun I had this summer was just relaxing in my pool in our new Connecticut house this summer. It was just great to chill and get away from the city. My version of swan lake!"

Marissa Webb

"Organizing my shoes in my closet. It might not seem like a monumental task, but this was a big achievement for me (I'm a little obsessed with color order). Still a work in progress!"

Mara Hoffman

"My husband and I recently purchased a house in upstate New York, which has been a longtime dream. It's my favorite place to go to reset and relax on the weekends with the fam — to be in the woods and with nature."

Rebecca Minkoff

"I love going out east and getting out to Montauk with my family. Any time spent at the beach with my family is my idea of perfect. My husband and I had a friend's 35th birthday party, which was '90s themed; I love dressing up!"

Ji Oh

"I went back to Seoul to visit my family and traveled throughout South Korea — visiting different beaches and old temples and enjoying authentic Korean cuisine. I made time to stop by The Leeum, which is a museum located in Hannam-dong, and its architecture is the best out of all the galleries in Seoul."

Aries Show others what you are made of. Taking a leadership position within your current field will give you the opportunity to highlight your talents.

Taurus Your personal life will heat up, but don't invite trouble by neglecting responsibilities on the home front. Keep your promises.

Gemini A short jaunt away from familiar locales will provide you with inspiration for a new project. You will meet someone with compatible interests.

Cancer Changes are inevitable. Rather than fight or evade what's happening, take a close look to see how you can turn things to your best advantage.

Leo Don't slide into cruise control thinking things will run smoothly without your supervision. You will be a prime contender for a promotion.

Virgo Changes are in the works, but don't expect to be offered much information. Get your facts firsthand and avoid being misled.

Libra You will be bored if you have too much time on your hands. Fill your day by putting unfinished business to rest in order to feel a sense of accomplishment.

Scorpio Negotiations and contracts should be carefully considered. You will be less inclined to overreact if you can keep out of other people's way.

Sagittarius Everyone will be drawn to you. Discuss your plans openly and call in favors or ask for assistance with the projects you are ready to pursue.

Capricorn Get all the facts in place before you make suggestions or plans. You will be accused of overstepping your boundaries if you come on too strong.

Aquarius It's your future, so take all the time you need to feel comfortable with how things are going. Moving too quickly will cause you to make mistakes.

Pisces Don't limit what you can do. If you feel that a new position will be more rewarding, go after it.

3 Things to watch as Giants face Cowboys

NFL. What better way to kick off the season than with one of the biggest rivalries in football?

The Giants look to snap the Cowboys' four-game winning streak in this series, as they head to Dallas for their season opener Sunday (8:30 p.m., NBC).

New York had an eventful offseason (the Jason Pierre-Paul mess) and an uneven preseason (going 2-2 and enduring touchdown droughts), so they'll look to put the past behind them and begin their journey of trying to end their three-year playoff drought.

Metro takes a look at key storylines to watch ahead of Sunday's prime-time tilt.

TONY WILLIAMS
sports@metro.us

1 Eli in the end zone

Sure, he saw limited action in the preseason, but the offensive struggles of Manning and his co-starters was real. The starters nary saw the end zone, leaving the point-scoring to kicker Josh Brown. Manning didn't throw a touchdown pass in the preseason, unless his pick-six to the Jets in the third exhibition game counts. Manning truly has a grasp on Ben McAdoo's two-year-old offense, so ultimately Big Blue's first unit will get into the end zone. But until they actually do, it'll remain a concern. Dallas ranked sixth in passing touchdowns allowed, but 31st in rushing touchdowns allowed, last season, so maybe there's hope for Manning and Co.

2 Beckham Jr. needs a sidekick

Wideout Victor Cruz likely won't be seen on Sunday, due to a troublesome calf injury, so that means someone else has to step up and be a viable No. 2 to help ease Beckham's burden. It could be wideout Rueben Randle, who can set himself up nicely by having a breakout game in the opening game of his contract season. Or tight end Larry Donnell, whose success snuck up on opponents last season. Or even someone like running back Shane Vereen, who has been one of the league's best receiving backs, after notching 107 receptions for his previous employer in New England.

3 Slowing down Dallas run game

The Cowboys posses arguably the most dominating offensive line in the league. And even though they lost last season's leading rusher, DeMarco Murray, to the rival Eagles, many pundits think they can plug in any running back and get the same results. They'll get the chance to highlight their new rotation of Darren McFadden, Joseph Randle, and Lance Dunbar against a Giants' run defense that is among the league's worst. New York was 31st against the run last season, and fifth-to-last in the preseason, allowing 120.2 yards per game. Not a recipe for success when dealing with the Cowboys' massive offensive line.

3 things to watch for as the Jets face the Browns

The first (real) game of the Todd Bowles/Mike Maccagnan era rolls into MetLife Stadium and for the first year head coach and his general manager, it is a chance to turn around a New York Jets franchise stuck in neutral the past four seasons.

Their first test, Sunday against the Cleveland Browns (1 p.m., CBS), is a very winnable game. The Browns have a less than ideal quarterback situation to go alongside a defense that struggled against the run last year. Here are three things to keep an eye on:

1 Ground and pound
The Browns had the league's worst run defense last year, giving up 4.5 yards per carry and 141.6 yards per game. With Chris Ivory looking sharp in training camp and preseason as well as Bilal Powell, the Jets will want to test this revamped Browns defense early in the game. Throw some Zac Stacy into the mix and there could be a lot of running between the tackles in this game.

2 Slow, methodical Fitz
This will be the first regular season start for Ryan Fitzpatrick as a Jet and he is an ideal fit in this offense. He's had success before with offensive coordinator Chan Gailey when the two were together with the Buffalo Bills, putting up the best numbers of his career during that span. The idea will be for the Jets to run the ball, control the clock and methodically move the ball down the field in the passing game.

DARRELLE REVIS WILL BE BACK IN GREEN AND WHITE LEADING THE JETS SECONDARY.

3 Discipline
The Jets were a rather average team last year in terms of penalties but they were an undisciplined bunch in crucial moments. False starts killed promising drives, offside penalties gave other teams a fresh set of downs. In Bowles, the Jets have a head coach high on discipline and accountability. This team should not be getting flagged as much.

Some clarification

Marshall explains himself

Brandon Marshall explained his controversial comments from this week's episode of "Inside the NFL" on Showtime Thursday. On the show, Marshall, said that there is a view around the league that "white players" and quarterbacks are treated differently by the NFL in terms of suspensions and league rulings. At no point did Marshall say this was his belief, just a belief he feels is held based on his research after multiple conversations with players from different locker rooms. "It had nothing to do with the judge, it's what I thought was the opinion of a bunch of players. It had nothing to do with the case, it was just our approach," Marshall said on Thursday. "The only thing I'll say about that whole deal, I think we all know, especially you guys more than anybody else, whenever you talk about race, whenever you talk about religion and politics publicly, it's uncomfortable and can be tough at times."

Joe Pisapia's FanDuel NFL Week 1 lineup picks:

Quarterback:

I briefly flirted with Aaron Rodgers and Andrew Luck, but their road matchups are slight turn-offs, even in cash games. Their respective salaries also made them even more unappealing (north of $9K each). Over the last few weeks, Sam Bradford has looked very comfortable in Chip Kelly's high-volume offense. Playing in Atlanta, in a dome, against a solid defense, Bradford saves me another $500, which allows me to upgrade at another position without a drop-off in QB production.
FINAL SELECTION:
Sam Bradford $7,500

Running backs:

At one point, I was willing to pay all the way up for Adrian Peterson at $9,200, but with so much time to think about it, doing this now seems unnecessary. I wanted to stay in the top tier for my RB1 and Eddie Lacy is in a spot where I feel most comfortable dropping down in price.
FINAL SELECTION:
Eddie Lacy $8,500

Wide receivers:

After my top choice in Jordy Nelson went down with a season-ending injury, Julio Jones was the obvious pivot for me. Once I turned the page to Bradford, Jordan Matthews was the logical choice. Kelvin Benjamin left the mix due to injury and Andre Johnson was hovering in my mind, but I was looking toward the end zone. Is there a more maligned player who scored 10 TDs last year than Mike Wallace?
FINAL SELECTIONS:
Julio Jones $9,000/Jordan Matthews $6,800/Mike Wallace $6,400

Tight end:

Peyton Manning has a history of using the tight end in his offense and Owen Daniels should at least be a target in the end zone. His track record makes him worth the upgrade of a few hundred dollars.
FINAL SELECTION:
Owen Daniels $5,500

Jets a safe bet on opening weekend

Smart play from Ryan Fitzpatrick could be the key for the Jets Sunday. / GETTY IMAGES

NFL. If you make a wager (not that we condone such a thing), put money on the Jets, Chargers and Colts this week.

Browns at Jets (-3)
The Jets may not be a playoff-caliber squad, but the Browns are destined to be among the dregs of the league this year. Cleveland lost productive TE Jordan Cameron to the Dolphins in free agency and WR Josh Gordon to a year-long substance-abuse suspension. The Jets 6th-ranked defense from last year should have no problem containing either Josh McCown or Johnny Manziel and the lack of talent around them.

The pick: Jets -3

Lions at Chargers (-2.5)
The Lions were not nearly as good as their 11-5 record last year would have you believe. Detroit was 6-1 in one-score games and had a turnover ratio of +7 (these things tend to even out from year to year), and based on point differential the Lions should have only won nine games. The Chargers should be able to tame this weakened Lions defense as Philip Rivers has a slew of options at wideout, including the newly acquired Stevie Johnson, who is due for a career renaissance.

The pick: Chargers -2.5

Colts (-3) at Bills
The Colts come into the 2015 season as one of the favorites to win the Super Bowl, and they'll open against a common playoff "sleeper" pick for this year in Buffalo. The Bills are a new-look team as they brought in Rex Ryan to take over as head coach. LeSean McCoy will be the go-to running back with Fred Jackson and C.J. Spiller out of the picture.

The Bills are 6-1 ATS (against the spread) as a home underdog going back to 2013. Andrew Luck is a front-runner for the MVP but the Bills defense was ranked 4th in yards allowed last season, so he'll have his hands full on the road.

The pick: Colts -3
